thehighlandcollective One of the highlights of our time in @VisitTrentino was a music concert we attended - yet this was no ordinary concert.

We got a cable car at 4.30am up to around 2,500m where the stage was set. Being high in the mountains during sunrise is always special, but when you pair it with the soundtrack of folk music echoing all around - it becomes surreal. Photo: @stuart.laing #TrentinoWow #HighlandCollective

The road was constructed in the 1800s along Lake Garda, despite many thinking it was a crazy idea. It hugs steep cliffs, passes through hand-dug tunnels and climbs over 650m. It is now closed to cars but is great fun to cycle up (and down) rabshab Hunting for bangers in the morning light.

We were up this mountain at 4.30am for a sunrise concert. The music was great but it was too hard not to wander off when the light was like this.

rabshab Sunrise in the dolomites.

@stuart.laing and I drove through a campsite full of the Italian army to get to this location. They didn't look to happy about being disturbed at sunrise but I think it was worth it.

rabshab The weather isn't always peachy.

We were met with storms on our first night in Trentino and didn't quite get the sunset we were hoping for. Cant complain about the weather too much when the views are like this though. Looking out over the scar-like cliff that runs through Riva del Garda.

I don't know who this is. I was up at the top of a mountain in Italy for a concert. There was quite a few people around and I saw this lady making her way across the hillside and thought it would make for a nice image.

rabshab Road to nowhere.

Wandering down off the hillside after sunset. I kept holding @stuart.laing up so that I could take photos of this road. Dont think any of my shots did the scene justice but thought I should post one nonetheless. Sometimes the memory is better than the photo.
